These lectures are intended to illustrate certain Socialistic tendencies in recent literature. Some of them will deal with the writings of avowed Socialists, who have embodied in books their ideas of an amended social system, either as deliberately planned Utopias, or as criticisms of one aspect or another of the existing state of Society and of the struggle for a better; others with writers who, in novel or drama, have depicted the anomalies and injustice of things as they are, indicating, more or less, the direction in which they look for amendment.
